I have a simple script which works as a clickme button but it doesn't support highlighting multiple links (click multiple links & look at it). My shortcode: `function shortcode($atts, $content = null) { extract($atts); // The anchor's post ID $post_id = $content; $links = array(' link1 ' => 'link1', ' link2 ' => 'link2'); $post_link = $links[$post_id]; if (isset($post_link)) { echo 'x' . $post_link . '; } } add_shortcode('noctime','shortcode');` I do it in the document.ready function, but there are still some bugs in it. Below are some things I tried to clean up the code, but I'm not sure if this can be optimized. Live: `http://ideone.com/W4cNo2 A: You are passing an array of strings to $links, but the array keys are not unique. I can think of two ways to achieve this: Return array references and use array_map to get the corresponding posts: // defaults to `0` if undefined $post_id = $content[0]; $posts = array(); // if not set use defaults if (! isset($posts[$post_id])) $posts[$post_id] = ""; // fix the array references $posts[$post_id] = 1; $posts[0] = ""; // create an array of post links foreach ($links as $post_id => $post_link) { $posts[$post_id] = $post_link; } // output the divs foreach ($posts as &$post) { $post = is_array($post)? implode(" ", $post) : $post; } return "x $post "; Explode the array first to create an array of strings, then join them. This is much slower however. Pass a hidden field to the shortcode, and populate it on document. 5ec8ef588b`
