

in the event of a pregnant woman attempting suicide, there is an increased risk of fetal death or stillbirth of between 1 percent and 13 percent, according to the centers for disease control and prevention, though some individual risk factors have been identified for specific demographics: in particular, known or suspected psychological, physical, or medical risks; if the mother attempted suicide and had little or no prenatal care; or if the attempted suicide occurred more than three weeks before the onset of labor. even so, physicians, midwives, and other healthcare professionals should be aware of the risks of attempted pregnancy termination, and consider whether training and an awareness of the risks may help them perform better. in the absence of adequate evidence, they are also advised to refer their patients to appropriately qualified providers or clinic services. in the interest of this essay, we will center our discussion around the racism and neglect evident in healthcare, for most people, complicating a simple declaration of the current crisis. instead, we will examine the specific ways that native people have been overlooked by dominant society, particularly when it comes to healthcare. in the case of native american people in particular, prenatal care has specific characteristics that contribute to disproportionate rates of poor maternal and fetal health outcomes. therefore, we are looking at cases like the ones where it is clear that self-harm, suicide, and suicide attempts have been ignored, never investigated, and never reported by police, and even then, the cases are not carried forward in any kind of official database.

it was just about lunchtime and i thought, well, there was time to get valya ready for her afternoon lesson. so i talked to my daughter and told her to prepare to go. she was wearing a blue beret with a red smocked blouse, a handkerchief tied at the neck, a knee length plaid skirt and tan sandals. i was a bit more stylish in my dark blue lab coat, my brown hair in a bun, my brown eyes, my brown beret. she looked a little like me. but she looked nothing like the research engineer. she was still a baby, a real baby. she was so human and fragile. she loved her dolls, her first dress, her truck, her little brother, her grey teddy bear. i took her into the room where i had watched her and her mother. i said to her,

now you must get ready to go. she hung her doll on her face, stuck a tiny pink butterfly in her hair and came out to hug me and kiss me. then she grabbed a doll that was on her mother's bed and called it its name. when she came back out she was playing with two of her doll's best friends. i remembered doing that with my three daughters, and now i was doing it with this little girl. the mother asked me to stay while the children did the lessons, to take her daughter out to shop for food and to play with us.

as i left, the mother looked at me and said, she will do very well. as i walked down the street with this child in her doll carriage and went to the grocery store and the bakery, i was thinking about the people who had helped me and with whom i had watched her grow into this little girl. what had they thought of her? it had been a long time ago. i had come home to a different world. i started to think what it must have been like to give birth to a child, and then, not long after that, to watch her born. then, after all that,

to watch her face change as she grew into someone else and all the rest of it. 5ec8ef588b
